Some idea of the extent of office seeking may be gathered from the statistics relating to fourth-class post-offices. Of these offices there are over 68,000. It has been estimated that an average of ten applicants exist for each office. This would make an aggregate of 680,000.

There were 5,556,562 votes cast for Mr. Cleveland in the entire country. It would appear, therefore, if any degree of confidence can be placed in this estimate, that about one Cleveland voter out of eight is after a post-office.
